

life, that you had forfeited it and turned it away?

DEFENDANT MCCARTHY: I know sir, but we done it, and what else can we do?

THE COURT: There is nothing else you can do or this court can do but pass sentence upon you. Have you anything to say Mr. Higgins?

MR. HIGGINS: In all matters where there is a hope for the restoration to good citizenship of a young man who has made a mistake, it is always the purpose of the State to do what can be done to rectify the bad habits of a youngster and see that he starts out with some view of correcting his habits. I dont see what hope there is for the young man who has just spoken. He seems to view with very little concern his breaking into the store, and he does not seem to have any regrets for it; and I cant suggest anything to the court that would be of any benefit to him, except to enforce the law. If there was any hope that he will turn from his waywardness, and if he could redeem himself, it would be the desire of the State to extend some leniency to allow him to do it; but from his own conversation with the court he seems to have very little regret for what he has done, and I have nothing to suggest to the court except to sentence him and let the Board of Pardons govern his sentence according to his good behavior there.

THE COURT: Now this other boy; how old are you?

DEFENDANT THOMAS OLGIN: Eighteen.

THE COURT: Where were you born?

DEFENDANT OLGIN: Arizona.

THE COURT: Where is your mother?

DEFENDANT OLGIN: Arizona.

THE COURT: Where is your father?

DEFENDANT OLGIN: I have no father.

THE COURT: Has your mother got some more children?

DEFENDANT OLGIN: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: How many children?

DEFENDANT OLGIN: Two
