James that her father was not acting right with her sister, Helen. While the acts complained of were serious, I do not know as to the truth of the accusations but I do know that it caused my brother James to become greatly excited and worried and that he said it must be stopped; that within a few days of the homicide, James returned to my home, his home as well, greatly excited and told about having been chased by the father of Helen and Antonia after he had asked him about what he had heard, and he said that he knew that Tryfonopoulos intended to and he was afraid that he would kill him. He was obliged and I learned that on the day before the shooting took place, to go to the Juvenile Court and make complaint against Tryfonopoulos.

After he had done so it seemed as if the man had become so thoroughly frightened at the danger he was in on account of Tryfonopoulos' threats and feeling towards him that he was simply beside himself, and the afternoon and evening before the shooting took place he was moaning and despairing, startled at any unusual noise outside or inside the house. I was present during that time and heard the door bell ring longer than usual, and this caused my brother James to become greatly excited and he said, "That's him, he's going to kill me", or something to that effect. When the ring sounded a second time and someone said, "Open the door! I am a friend" we all thought it was Tryfonopoulos and expected him to break down the door, but James fired the shot in random style, I am sure not aiming to kill or intending to do anything other than scare Tryfonopoulos from our home.

We were all amazed and in deep grief when a short time after we learned that the shot fired by my brother had struck and killed a man by the name of Dan Karras, who had been one of our nearest and best friends, a companion and associate of my brother James and of all of us for many years.
