

THE COURT: Step forward, Mr. Frank. Mr. Frank, there is an information against you, charging the crime of grand larceny. You have heard the statement of your counsel, that you want to waive the reading of the information and enter your plea at this time?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: What is your plea to the information, guilty or not guilty?

THE DEFENDANT: I am guilty.

THE COURT: You are guilty?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: And you waive the right to take time for the passing of sentence?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes.

THE COURT: I presume your counsel has informed you that you can waive time and receive your sentence now?

THE DEFENDANT: I wish to waive it, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You want to waive that and receive your sentence now?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Will you be seated just a moment by your counsel, Mr. Frank. Judge Rogers, what do you know about this case?

MR. ROGERS: If the Court please, I understand that the defendant has stolen quite a number of articles, automobile accessories, but in view of the fact that he has entered a plea of guilty and in view of the further fact that he has a wife
