and if that can not be done then to give him a parole.

Knowing this boy as I do and having been intimately associated with him from the time he was four till he was of age and knowing his true and real disposition, perhaps better than anyone else on earth, I feel quite sure that there just must have been some miscarriage of justice when a conviction was secured against him.

I shall greatly appreciate all or anything that you may be able to do for him.

Yours very truly,

J. L. Hopkins
