

THE COURT: Were you ever married?

THE DEFENDANT: No, sir.

THE COURT: Have you ever been in trouble before?

THE DEFENDANT: No, sir.

THE COURT: Never arrested before?

THE DEFENDANT: No, sir.

THE COURT: How long have you lived in this country?

THE DEFENDANT: I have been working in Delta for about six years.

THE COURT: For about six years. Just as a common laborer?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes.

THE COURT: You say you have never been in trouble before?

THE DEFENDANT: No, sir.

THE COURT: You must have been in trouble to have gotten in jail?

THE DEFENDANT: I had been drunk this night.

THE COURT: You were put in jail for being drunk?

THE DEFENDANT: Yes.

THE COURT: Were you punished for that?

THE DEFENDANT: I was turned loose at that time by the marshal and later picked up again, and I was going to pay the damages which was fifteen dollars.

THE COURT: Well, did you pay the damages?

THE DEFENDANT: No, sir. I was working at the time, and the man I was working for, I signed papers for the Marshal to draw this money.

THE COURT: Has it been made possible for the marshal to draw the money belonging to the jail?

THE DEFENDANT: I am not working now.

THE COURT: Why did you break the jail up?

THE DEFENDANT: There was boys coming along there throw-
